

I think it is an outrage that the FCC allows the satellite provider, Directv, require that you subscribe to their satellite service package in order to become eligible to purchase the NFL Sunday ticket. Directv is the only provider in the US to offer the NFL sunday ticket, which is not a problem. The fact that they extort you into having a directv subscription in order to watch your favorite football team is outrageous!!! I am a cable tv subscriber and quite happy but if I want to watch the NFL sunday ticket I am forced to become a Directv subscriber and either cancel my superior cable tv or duplicate my services and pay for the same exact channels on directv. I don't mind paying for the NFL package at an outrageous price $225, but then they extort you to pay at least 33.95/month x 12 months. It feels like I'm being forced to pay for the NFL and then punished because I am a cable tv customer. Is this fair? or more importantly is this legal?
